funded by the companies making these same products under a scheme called Cost Recovery) has named itself as chief censor of all things health-related.

Before the election, the AVN attempted to get 2 billboards erected in order to inform the public that vaccines can and do cause death in some people. One would think this would be relevant information for any parent considering vaccination?

The family of Gabby Larkin, a young woman who developed a rare form of ovarian cancer within a very short time after receiving a Gardasil HPV vaccine – a cancer she subsequently died from – graciously allowed the AVN to use Gabby's photo and a bit of her story on our billboards.

Agree with the TGA or shut up!

Every single billboard company we spoke with was happy to accept our artwork. Once they submitted it for approval however, they all got the same answer from the Outdoor Media Association (OMA), the body which ensures that 'standards' are adhered to:

...this advertisement does not align with the Therapeutic Goods Administration Act, which notes that advertising relating to therapeutic goods "must not be inconsistent with relevant current public health campaigns"

Since we were not advertising a therapeutic good (nor would we ever do so), we felt that this policy did not apply to our billboards. The companies we spoke with agreed –

The TGA rewriting history

It was around this time, Gabby's parents discovered the TGA had removed their daughter's report from the government's database.

Gabby's doctor had confirmed that she (the doctor) had reported Gabby's post-vaccination death to the DAEN database where it had remained in the official statistics until very recently. For some inexplicable reason, the TGA decided to remove Gabby's death report and apparently, many other adverse event reports as well.

A recent Freedom of Information claim (FOI HPV) has uncovered dozens of other HPV adverse event reports which have also been either removed or were never added to the database at all. If this is the situation with HPV vaccinations, one has to wonder how many other reports of Adverse Events Following Immunisation (AEFI) are likewise being hidden?

It is estimated that only 1% (approximately) of AEFI are ever reported – a shocking statistic considering the fact that vaccines are not subjected to the same sorts of clinical trials pre-licensure as other drugs and rely instead on 'post-marketing surveillance' to catch the risks of death and serious injury in those who receive them.

If those few reactions which are reported are arbitrarily removed from the database, what does that say about the TGA's or the Government's commitment to ensuring that the vaccines we are using are as safe as they possibly can be?

Our families matter

Australian High Court decisions have enshrined the absolute right for all citizens and residents to speak publicly about any political issue. The Court did not say we were only allowed to discuss issues if the government agreed with them. They did not say that this right was sacrosanct except when it came to issues of vaccination or other medical topics.

We've just commemorated the 75th anniversary of D-Day, the invasion of Europe by allied forces to preserve freedom in the face of tyranny. More than 10,000 allied forces died on the beaches of Normandy to keep our nations free. I have to wonder what these brave young men would think if they knew that the nations they died for had started to bear such a strong resemblance to the ones they'd fought against?

How does one report what is believed to be an adverse reaction?

An informative post, thank you you.

Click this link and report to both the TGA and the AVN. All reactions MUST be reported.

It would be better if a medico who is genuinely supportive submitted the adverse reaction report. Be wary of the smiling assassin...the one who's on your side but puts something entirely different in the report downplaying the reaction. The one whose loyalty is to the pharmaceutical company, not you.

TGA aren't interested in receiving adverse reaction reports and will do whatever they can to downplay or dodge.

They aren't interested in pursuing GPs who submit fraudulent reports and they are not interested in correcting fraudulent reports when informed of such.

Get a copy of the report ASAP (typically 3 months after reporting) to ensure it is correct and then chase up another copy a year later and see how it has been altered.

Their FOI staff have been helpful in the past.

Unfortunately I speak from experience.

Nasreen – that sounds terrible. She can report this via this website – go to the 'Vaccine Injury' page, and then 'Report an adverse vaccine reaction'. You will see 2 alternatives, to fill in a form on the AVN page or to send a report to the TGA via their online form. You might also want to send a message to the AVN via the form on our Contact page, and ask if you or she could be put in touch with someone in Cairns, for support.

The TGA probably couldn't prevent a billboard mounted on a trailer or the side of a large vehicle from being displayed.

actually Greg that has been done successfully in Australia by other groups, personally this admin doesn't know if the AVN has looked into that
